A New Bud Blooms

It is always heartening to see a new bud taking birth. Whatever a seed undergoes from incubation till unveiling to the world may be a long story but thousands eyes await to see the bud blooming into a flower. Journal bears a close simily to a bud: hopefully it shall be unique in attire and fragrance, and naturally it will raise lots of hopes and expectations.

Undoubtedly this will be a hallmark in the "long march" to the improvement of medical education. It is earnestly hoped that this will activate some original research; as research like beauty always needs recognition. Case reporting will help a long way in sharpening the observation and broadening the outlook. It will provide a plateform to express what is hidden in the hearts and needs to be put in "black and white".

I am sure our learned staff will seize upon this opportunity to provide reviews on current debatable topics and issues. Anecdotes and medical quizzes will adorn the beauty of the magazine. Another dream which might be translated into reality will be the involvement of Khyber alumini so as to facilitate the exchange of ideas and improve communication. Sincerity of purpose and solemn determination will produce a truly scientific project – nurtured on sound lines.

A plant obviously requires the essentials to keep it alive; we pledge to provide original research work and reviews as water and fertilizer, and anecdotes and quizzes as air and sunlight; we will try to cut and prune the plant in the form of healthy criticism. Let me make a point before ending, "let us praise the success but let us also acclaim the efforts which produced it".
